

Weekly Market Update

Primary market environment: With inflation figures easing in Spain and Germany, the mood on the primary market brightened. In the wake of this, hopes were raised that the ECB will opt for a rate hike of 50 bps at its next meeting. Speaking of the ECB, statements on possible QT tapering in 2023 are also eagerly awaited.

Primary market barometer

SSA

In the SSA segment, the picture has hardly changed compared with the previous weeks. There are still hardly any transactions. The funding plans seem to be completed for this year. One highlight was that the EIB used blockchain technology to issue a bond.

Covered Bonds

Somewhat declining inflation figures and the associated interest rate expectations made themselves felt positively on the primary market. This week's new issues went through smoothly. However, as the end of the year approaches, the opportunities for issuance are becoming fewer.

Senior Unsecured

After a slowdown at the beginning of the week, the primary market for senior unsecured bank bonds picked up noticeably again today. Issuers took advantage of the constructive market environment also for non-preferred transactions. Yet, the year is drawing to a close and a pause in activity is foreseeable.

The risk trend indicator has turned from green to red for bonds from the SSA and covered bond segments. Not necessarily untypical for the end of the year with reduced demand. At least the market environment for the issuance of senior unsecured bank bonds was once again quite constructive.

SSA

The activities in the SSA segment are currently manageable and thus only play a secondary role. It is noteworthy that the EIB issued a EUR 100 million bond (MS-33) on Tuesday using a private block-chain technology (Ethereum). The focus was to gain further insights in the use of digital technology and the settlement process. The transaction was the second tranche based on a digital process, although the initial placement was still conducted via a public platform. Already on Monday, the EU was active in the classic format (auction). Two outstanding benchmark issues were raised by a total of EUR 16.27 billion.

Outlook: The bulk of issuers have already closed the books for this year. For example, the lack of financing requirements at the federal states contributed to this. As January is traditionally one of the strongest months of the year in terms of issuance, a contrasting picture can be expected right at the start of the new year, and thus a significant increase in issuance activity. This is despite the fact that it can be assumed that advance financing has already been provided in anticipation of rising interest rates and a widening of spreads.

Covered Bonds

As the end of the year approaches, issuers whose funding plans have not yet been fully completed are under time pressure. At least, the somewhat softening inflation figures have been conducive to moderate interest rate declines. At the same time, expectations of the next ECB rate hike were reduced, so that the majority of the market now assumes a 50 bps increase. Primary market activity also benefited from this development.

Since Monday, 4 issues with a longest maturity of 5 years have been successfully placed.

France's Credit Mutuel Home Loan SFH generated an order book of EUR1.45 billion for the covered (EUR1 billion, 5-year), which is 100% secured by prime residential loans. The final spread of MS+18 was 2 bps below the marketing spread. Commerzbank chose a 3-year maturity for its Pfandbrief issue. In view of good demand - the order book was oversubscribed by almost 1.8 times - the bond (UR 1 billion) was ultimately priced at MS+1 vs. MS+ 5 in marketing and a new issue premium of 3 bps. The latest issue increased Cofina's placement volume this year to EUR 5.25 billion. Credit Suisse (Switzerland) probably closed the constructive week in the segment with its euro-comeback today.

Risk premiums increase differently and force differentiation

iBoxx Covered Bond-Indices, ASW in bps

Since April of this year, the spreads of various jurisdictions have been continuously diverging, illustrating increased differentiation. German Pfandbriefe, as recently issued by Commerzbank, thus remain relatively more expensive. In our view, this trend will continue in the new year.

"The secondary market continues to work off increased swap levels! A sustainable recovery is not discernible in view of the unchanged framework conditions (no support from central banks, compression pressure in the Bund / swap spreads). At best, with the latest new issues <5Y, such as CMZB 2 3/4 12/08/25 Corp -issued at MS+1- the NIP's are gradually pricing themselves out. It is quite conceivable that with primary market activity expected to close soon for the year, the pressure will ease somewhat."

Comment from the Helaba trading floor

In the secondary market, there are widespread fears that there will be renewed upward pressure on spreads when activity resumes in January 2023. There are also fears that the coming months will be very challenging, particularly with respect to the ability of market makers to smooth. A gradual pullback by central banks seems to be a foregone conclusion, although analyses conclude that QE played a rather subordinate role in terms of overall volume. Our traders do not share the result of these studies in terms of spread effects, especially since the covered bond market has not been structurally homogeneous for many years, supposedly small changes in the adjusting screws are significant.

In the week ending November 25, 2022, the ECB reduced its CBPP3 holdings by a relatively significant EUR 453 million compared to the previous week, as we expected at the end of the year. In terms of APP, holding positions in the amount of EUR 2.28 billion were reduced.

Outlook: The remaining issuance window this year is steadily shrinking. The recent brightening of sentiment could encourage issuers to become active in the short term, especially as the primary market is expected to be very crowded in January.

Senior Unsecured

After it initially appeared at the beginning of the week as if the expected year-end calm had already set in, the primary market for senior unsecured bonds picked up again noticeably today. A total of five transactions in EUR benchmark format with fixed coupons were realized since Monday. Of these, three were non-preferred bonds. The Maltese Bank of Valetta was able to finalize its project for a non-preferred issue with a volume of EUR 325 million, which had already been announced in September. Issuers thus took advantage of the quite constructive market environment to issue bonds with weaker ratings. Medium to longer maturities were also in good demand, provided adequate spread premiums.

Outlook: The primary market for senior unsecured bank bonds has been surprisingly active since the summer break, albeit at higher risk premiums. Many banks have overfulfilled their issuance plans; high funding reserves are in demand in uncertain times. In addition, the institutions want to ensure that they can meet their regulatory requirements (MREL/TLAC) even in the case of a more difficult market environment. The year is now drawing to a close and the books will soon be closed. A significant slowdown in activity is therefore foreseeable in our view.

„Due to the holiday day (Thanksgiving) and the shortened trading day on Black Friday, flows were rather below average; they were balanced between buyers and sellers overall - also in terms of maturities - but in relatively small volumes. ETF funds were active on both the bid and ask side. Asset managers and insurance companies took advantage of the still attractive spreads and tended to act as buyers. Here, yesterday's "Monthly Rebalancing" could provide some momentum again.

Short news

11/31 ESG is taking over the loan market: Bankers expect at least half of the loan deals for investment-grade firms in Europe, the Middle East, and Africa to be tied to environmental, social, and governance (ESG) targets in 2023, based on interviews conducted by Bloomberg. Firms are putting greater emphasis on this amid a push from regulators to force banks to pay closer attention to ESG.

11/26 Fitch Ratings on covered bonds in Singapore: According to Fitch Singapore covered bonds are on the right track to achieve equivalence with the European Union covered bonds, as they comply with most aspects of the EU Directive. The rating agency stressed that Singapore's covered bonds are rated AAA, equal to or higher than covered bonds in the EU.

11/26 Moody's on planned credit register in Estonia: On 22 November, the Estonian Finance Ministry and banking association advanced plans to introduce a credit register to provide a comprehensive account of loan applicants' existing debt. According to the agency, the measure is credit positive for the asset quality of Estonian banks and their covered bonds because it will increase the transparency of household indebtedness. The Ministry plans to establish the necessary legal framework in 2023 to operate the register from 2025

11/25 ECB hits banks with leveraged-loan capital charges: The European Central Bank (ECB) is imposing higher capital requirements on lenders including BNP Paribas and Deutsche Bank, arguing that they have ignored warnings to cut risk in the lucrative business of leveraged finance, according to people familiar with the matter heard by Bloomberg.

11/24 Spain to push ahead with windfall tax on banks and energy groups: Spain will push ahead with its controversial plan to impose windfall taxes on banks and energy companies with lawmakers set to approve the move despite the concerns of international institutions. As reported by the Financial Times, an amendment says that at the end of 2024 the Spanish authorities should evaluate whether the taxes should be made permanent.

11/22 S&P on credit outlook for Danish covered bonds: According to the agency’s view, stable issuer ratings and outlooks and a strong sovereign will continue to support ratings stability for Danish covered bonds despite increasing interest rates and continued inflationary pressure.

Leisure tip for the weekend: Christmas tree felling at Schloss Wissen, Weeze

Schloss Wissen, Weeze - With a self-cut tree your Christmas celebration gets a very individual touch. Children in particular are proud and happy when they return from their winter adventure from the forest with their favorite tree. The forestry operation plants several thousand Nordmann firs every year, which are lovingly cared for at least eight years until they have grown into magnificent Christmas trees and bring a sparkle to children's eyes. But it is not only the appearance of the Nordmann fir that brings joy: as it neither needles nor pricks, it is particularly easy to care for. By the way: a 2m tree needs about 2L of water per day. After cutting the fir tree, mulled wine and various delicacies await you at the huts.
